IRIS CULTIVATION

Most irises will succeed well in any type of soil, from almost pure sand to stiff clay. When one may choose, a medium-heavy, fairly well-enriched soil is to be preferred. A heavy soil may be improved by the addition of sand, sifted coal ashes, wood ashes, gypsum or pulverized limestone. For light, sandy soils inclined to be too porous or open, gypsum or limestone is effective. When it comes to drainage the iris is the most particular of plants so that thorough drainage is the first essential of iris growing.

Bearded irises should be planted almost on the surface, Japanese irises and other beardless types somewhat deeper but not deep and bulbous irises from three to four inches. They may be planted at any season of the year when not in bloom although the time usually recommended is July, August and early September.

RATINGS

The figures given immediately following the name of a variety are the official ratings by the American Iris Society, the first being the "Exhibition Rating" or the rating as an exhibition flower; the second figure being the "Garden Rating" or the rating for its garden effect. One hundred is considered perfect by the American Iris Society, but as there is no such thing as perfection because of the necessity of leaving room for improvement, no iris has ever been rated 100, the official ratings being as follows:

95	almost perfect
90	very fine
85	fine
80	very good
70	good
60	good but not outstanding
50	fair
Below 50	poor
